FUND MANAGER'S COMMENTARY

In September, the Asian USD bond market performance was flat as higher US Treasury ("UST") yields offset the effect of tightening spreads. During the month, UST yields rose amid more hawkish expectation on the path of interest rate normalisation. Meanwhile, investor sentiment within the Asian USD bond market was generally stable over the month, with spreads tightening across all sectors. The investment grade sector underperformed the high yield sector, as the longer duration profile of the sector was more impacted by the rise in UST yields. Within the high yield space, high yield sovereign bonds did well on the back of strong investor demand, while high yield corporate bonds were boosted by the broad outperformance of commodity-related names. By country, Korean was the key underperformer on the back of geopolitical tensions.
