FUND MANAGER'S COMMENTARY

For the month of April, the increase in US Treasury ("UST") yields had a negative impact on Asian USD-denominated bonds; as represented by the JP Morgan Asia Credit Index, Asian USD-denominated bonds delivered a -0.66% return. Asian non-investment grade underperformed as high yield credit spreads widened over the month, while Asian investment-grade credit spreads were largely unchanged. The longer-duration Asian investment-grade sovereign segment also underperformed on the sector's higher sensitivity to the rise in UST yields.

Economic data took a back seat in April as investors focused on geopolitical developments. Korean leaders Moon Jae-in and Kim Jong Un held a historic meeting at the border between the two countries, and agreed to work towards ending hostilities between the two nations. A proposed Trump-Kim summit has been planned for June, and represents a significant step towards a de-escalation of tensions on the Korean Peninsula. In the Middle East, American, British and French military forces launched missile strikes on Syria in retaliation for a chemical weapons attack on a civilian neighbourhood in Damascus; this was followed by US sanctions on several Russian oligarchs connected to the Russian government, a supporter of the Assad government. Sino-US trade tensions continued in the month, with the US slapping a 7-year ban on sales by American companies to China telecommunications equipment maker ZTE Corp for a breach of Iranian trade sanctions; the situation remains fluid with trade talks between the two countries scheduled for early-May.

After declining in March, UST yields jumped in April, as investors attempted to price in more of the Federal Reserve's rate hike guidance. The 10-year UST yield breached the psychological 3% mark during the month (to 3.03%), before closing the month at 2.95% for a 21 bps rise for the month of April. The UST curve shifted upwards in a near-parallel fashion, with the 2-year and 5-year UST yields rising by 22 bps and 24 bps respectively.

Accompanying the rise in risk free rates was a widening of spreads observed in the Asian non-investment grade segment, which led to the underperformance of Asian high yield bonds versus their investment-grade counterparts. Within the investment-grade segment, Asian investment-grade sovereigns were weaker on their higher sensitivity to rising US Treasury yields, while high yield sovereigns outperformed, aided by a rebound in Pakistan, which bucked the overall negative performance trend to deliver a positive return in April. The Global Emerging Market sovereign bond segment turned in a broadly weaker performance, with the JPMorgan EMBI Global Diversified index posting a -1.45% return in April, with weakness in Ecuador, Venezuela and Zambia weighing on overall returns for the Emerging Market benchmark.
