FUND MANAGER'S COMMENTARY

Over the month of August, Asian USD-denominated bonds delivered a positive return, with the representative JPMorgan Asia Credit Index posting a 0.51% return (in USD terms) over the month. While a widening of credit spreads in August was a negative, a decline in US Treasury yields aided performance of Asian credit in the month. Asian non-investment grade underperformed as spreads widened more in high yield, particularly in the sovereign segment, weighing on returns.

Despite US GDP coming in stronger-than-expected (2Q 18 GDP growth was revised higher to a 4.2% quarter-on-quarter annualised rate, up from 4.1% in the advance estimate) amid a well-telegraphed rate hike cycle by the US Federal Reserve, both long-end and short-end US Treasury (UST) yields declined in August, with the 2-year and 10-year UST yields falling by 4 bps and 10 bps (to 2.63% and 2.86% respectively). This came on the back of a bout of risk aversion stemming from ongoing Sino-US trade tensions, with the US set to impose tariffs on a further USD200 billion in Chinese imports, while Emerging Market (EM) woes deepened, with a precipitous decline in the Turkish lira (and concerns over foreign debt repayment ability), which sparked weakness in other EM currencies like the Brazilian real and Russian rouble. With a rapidly-declining peso, Argentina unexpectedly asked the IMF for an early release of a USD50 billion loan.

Asia remained relatively unscathed in the aftermath of a fairly weak month for Emerging Markets, with limited visible signs of contagion. While rising risk aversion attributed to trade tensions and negative political and economic developments in Turkey led to some spread widening for Asian credits, this was more-than-offset by the decline in UST yields, helping Asian USD-denominated bonds to deliver a positive return over the month.

By country, most Asian markets delivered positive returns in August, with the notable exception of Pakistan and Sri Lanka; both markets pared some of the strong gains registered in the previous month. Consequently, Asian High Yield Sovereign bonds were a weak spot within the overall Asian USD-denominated bond segment. Aiding the performance of Asian high yield was the strong showing by the quasi-sovereign segment, led by a general rebound in LGFV credits.
